

Fulminant hepatorenal syndrome due to Acetaminophen toxicity: A case report

Zahra Nekoukar¹, Minoog Moghimi¹, Zakaria zakariaei¹, Mahdi Fakhar¹, and Rabeeh Tabaripour¹

¹Mazandaran University of Medical Sciences

January 25, 2021

Abstract

Hepatorenal syndrome is a rare life-threatening complication of acetaminophen toxicity. It is not responsive to fluid therapy and need performing an emergent liver transplantation. Here, we introduce a 24-year-old woman with a history of chronic high doses of acetaminophen consumption, presenting with nausea, vomiting, lethargy, oliguria, and severe metabolic acidosis.

Hosted file

Acetaminophen toxicity.pdf available at <https://authorea.com/users/391700/articles/505734-fulminant-hepatorenal-syndrome-due-to-acetaminophen-toxicity-a-case-report>